“Is Global Warming Cause for Alarm?”

Luncheon Seminar

Speaker-Prof. Bob Carter, James Cook University & the University of Adelaide Venue: Monash Conference Centre, Level 7, 30 Collins Street, Melbourne

Bob Carter is a Research Professor at James Cook University (Queensland) and the University of Adelaide (South Australia). He is a marine geologist and environmental scientist with more than thirty years professional experience. Bob has served on many national and international research committees, including the Australian Research Council and as Chair of the Marine Science and Technologies Award Committee.

Bob Carter's current research interests lie in climate change, sea-level change and stratigraphy. His research has focussed on whether the available data on global climate, which form the basis for much of the public policy discussion, are adequate to assess the rate of natural climate change, and particularly whether current climate change is unusual, or justifies policies for costly counter-measures. Bob Carter's question may not follow the mainstream, but with his scientific background, his views should be of interest to members and guests, and this lunchtime seminar is sure to provide a stimulus to plenty of discussion, so join us on April 27, 2005.

Monash Conference Centre is conveniently located at the top of Collins St, with very good access to trams, trains (Parliament Station) and with parking facilities close by. An excellent cold buffet will be served at the end of formal discussion allowing time for networking and discussion before our target of enabling delegates to leave by 2pm.

Places are strictly limited and bookings must be received by Friday 22nd April or until filled.
